

A Legal Recruiter May Be Just What You Need to Advance Your Legal Career

Inside Counsel called upon Sabina Lippman in the article "Advancing a Legal Career May Be Easier When Working with Legal Recruiter." Ms. Lippman discusses the advantages of working with a recruiter to obtain placement as a top-tier law firm partner.

Ms. Lippman explains that a recruiter has access to more information on the firm and the position and intelligence on the criteria most important to each firm. Also, Ms. Lippman states that recruiters "want to get you the best and most sustainable deal possible."

A lot is at stake in negotiations for both parties. Lippman Jungers follows these trends and offers its clients relevant information as it places attorneys in top-tier partner positions, practice group positions and openings coming as a result of new offices.

Sabina Lippman Explains the "Selective Hiring" Process

In the Los Angeles Business Journal article, "Selective Hiring," Co-Founder Sabina Lippman explains that law firms have become much more selective in their hiring process than ever before.

"For instance, many lawyers looking to jump ship from one firm to another are typically asked 30 or 40 ethics-related questions, but it wasn't long ago that attorneys would only face a handful of such inquiries," Ms. Lippman comments.

With increased scrutiny, many law firms will depend on recruiting firms like Lippman Jungers even more to vet possible candidates before their internal interview process.
